

I would like to comment in support of the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law and the No Call List. Before we registered, it was not uncommon to come home from work and have 6 or 8 "hang ups" on the answering machine and another 2 to 4 calls in the evening from unwanted solicitors. Now, we rarely receive that type of call. This is a law that actually seems to be working as intended. We didn't want the calls, we put our name on the list, now we don't get the calls. Why does it need to be changed? The previous option of asking individual callers to put you on their no call list was pointless unless you are willing to keep time consuming and detailed records. Please leave the Indiana law alone. Thanks for allowing this comment.